Liked it better than choice of robots. Finished one play through in 2 hours.. "Choice of" games suddenly got worse. Specifically, Fog of War is a disappointment. It's short, it feels very much "on rails" and some roleplaying options leave you with very limited choices. If somebody made this game to show how pointless the war is does a bang-up job of showing how pointless it is to try and change anything in this scenario - even if and especially if you're honorable and try to do what people fighting a war are supposed to do, morally. So, basically, real life and your choices matter little. Nice idea for a "choice of" game.
