This was the assurance by Fiji Roads Authority at the first public consultation process held at the University of South Pacific Marine Campus yesterday. Fiji Roads strategy, planning and performance manager Christine Serreyn assured that this was unlike other consultations.

“The six months, we want to have a robust report to review what was done before then have some clear options for the future,” she said. “At the end of the six months, we want to have a robust report to review what was done before then have some clear options for the future.”

She was responding to a number of concerns raised by stakeholders because there were more tendencies to have a lot of consultations without seeing immediate or practical results.

Where the profit will go?

Over the next six months, a team of transportation experts with views from stakeholders will map out a practical plan and study for the Review of Greater Suva Transportation Strategy. It was attended by about 70 stakeholders that deal directly/indirectly with road networks in the peninsula.

Signs of prosperity

“It’s always important so that we don’t just delve in and fix the road. It’s something that needs to be addressed as soon as possible.”

“At this point in time, is gathering all issues so we can be gathering all issues so we can develop some developing options. So if we see that pedestrians should have a particular focus then we can start using experts that we have to look at and come up with solutions in the Greater Suva Area.”

Peter Wills of GTA Consultants and study Technical Leader & Transport Planner said things like

“We’re basically going to flush out those issues in the end.”
